Wheeling Island Historic District

The Wheeling Island Historic District, located in Wheeling, West Virginia, is of statewide architectural significance because of its diverse, mostly intact, collection of typical mid to late 19th and early 20th century residential buildings. The majority of the Island's residential buildings are modest, well-maintained, two story frame detached buildings on high foundations retaining minimal to moderate detailing. Although some patterns of development are evidenced, for the most part, each street has a variety of residential buildings ranging in age, style, scale, and integrity. The Wheeling Island Historic District encompasses the entire Island which is nestled in the Ohio River between downtown Wheeling and Bridgeport, Ohio. The Island is approximately three miles long, one mile wide, and tapering towards its ends.

There are 1186 resources within the Wheeling Island Historic District including five structures, four objects, and five sites. There are 63 non-contributing resources including two structures and one objects.

Generally, the streets on Wheeling Island are laid out in irregular grids to the north and south of Zane Street, one of its main east-west corridors. Other major east-west streets include Maryland, Indiana Street, New Jersey, Cromwell, and Georgia Streets to the north of Zane Street, and Delaware, Virginia, and Ohio Streets to the south of Zane Street. The north-south streets include Erie, Wabash, Huron, York, Broadway, Penn, and Front Streets and are given the designations of "North" and "South" as to their location in relation to Zane Street. A typical residential block has trees and sidewalks lining the streets with a high density of various sized buildings sharing uniform setbacks. The typical residential building styles are Queen Anne, Italianate, Colonial Revival, and Bungalow. These homes are of brick or frame construction and vary in degree of detail and integrity.

The majority of the Queen Anne homes on the Island retain a moderate to high degree of detail and integrity. Typical of the more substantial and elaborately detailed Queen Anne residences are found at 305 North Huron Street and 209 South Front Street. The former has a complex roof system incorporating a steeply pitched hipped roof, a narrow tower, an angled hipped roof appendage, and an intersecting gable at the south elevation. The later exhibits a unique angled porch with fluted vase-shaped columns, elaborately carved and detailed cornice frieze, large corbelled brick gable end chimneys, and latticed and scrolled vergeboards. More typical of the substantial Queen Anne residences is the moderately detailed home at 415 South Penn Street having only an octagonal turret with a pyramidal roof, paired bracketed cornice, and carved sunburst detailing at the gables and gable roof dormers.

The residences at 207 North Broadway Street and 210 South Penn Street are typical of the moderately sized Queen Anne residences on the Island. 207 North Broadway has a gable roof porch with carved ornamental gable trim, an angled bay window, modillions along the roof eaves, and a Palladian window at the gable end. 210 South Penn Street has a small half-porch with turned posts supporting a spindle frieze, and a hipped roof with an inset gable having an arched window and shaped shingle siding. 427 North Front Street has a square tower with a pyramidal roof, angled bay windows, and decorative gable trim. Many of the moderate Queen Anne homes retain their original massing and appendages but have been altered with the application of siding or the installation of replacement windows such as the homes at 7 Maryland Street and 636 South Front Street.

The Italianate residences of the Island are modest to moderate in scale and whether of brick or frame construction, most retain either decorative window hood molds and/or some kind of cornice frieze with brackets. The most intact brick Italianate homes are located at 405 and 406 South Penn Street. The former has a shallow hipped roof, tall, segmentally arched two-over-two sash windows, and a decorative architrave with a double door entrance. 406 South Penn Street has a "T" shaped floor plan, an entrance porch having square posts with braces, and molded and incised hoods at the two-over-two segmentally arched windows. Typical of the Island's brick Italianate residences are 3 and 326 North Front Street and 67 and 14-16 Ohio Street, while 117 North Huron Street and 422 South Penn Street are typical of the Island's frame Italianate residences. Many of these homes have experienced some degree of remodeling such as 34 South Broadway Street and 209 South Penn Street which have had their window openings altered yet retain their original cornices and brackets.

The Island's Colonial Revival homes are mostly well-preserved frame buildings having hipped roof with exaggerated eaves and decorative porches. The most substantial of these homes is the elegant house at 28 North Front Street with its massive hipped roof and octagonal shaped dormers, its cylindrical bay, and its porch incorporating a balustraded handrail groups of fluted Ionic columns and supporting a deep entablature. The large Colonial Revival home at 106 South Penn Street has Corinthian columns with egg and dart ornamentation at its porch roof cornice. The home also has angled and semi-circular bays and hipped roof dormers. The moderate scale, massing, and detail of the homes at 444 North Huron Street and 49 Maryland Street are typical of the Island's Colonial Revival homes. 444 North Huron Street is a two story rectangular block having Tuscan porch columns, angled bays, and modillions and dentils along the porch and roof entablatures. 49 Maryland is a two-and-one half story rectangular block having a hipped roof and a hipped roof dormer and porch with simple detailing. The majority of the Colonial Revival buildings retain this typical scale and massing, but have been covered with aluminum or vinyl siding such as 501 North Huron, 200 South Broadway, and 400 South Penn Street.

The majority of the Bungalow houses on the Island are modest one-and-a-half story frame buildings with moderate detail including gable roofs with shed or gable roof dormers and three-over-one sash windows. Most of these homes also have front roof slopes which extend to form the porch roof. 80 Maryland Street is an excellent example of the Bungalow Style with its tapered porch columns resting on a shingled rail and the house at 43 1/2 South Broadway has squared posts on a shingled rail with rafter ends lining the porch eaves. The homes at 603 North Wabash and 626 North Huron Street are typical of those bungalows that have been re-sided and have had their windows replaced.

There are two unusual residential buildings on the Island that deserve mention. The first of these buildings is located at 44 Kentucky Street and was constructed c. 1900. This two-and-one-half story frame residence is dominated by its two story porch featuring fluted square columns, a classically ornamented entablature below the broad gable porch roof having a Palladian window. Its classical detailing and scale give it a striking prominence in the streetscape of typical Island residences. The second building is located at 151 Virginia Street and was constructed c. 1925. This is a two-and-one-half story concrete stucco residence featuring carved and applied murals of grape vines and palm trees. The murals set this building apart from all other Island buildings.

Each residential block in the Wheeling Island Historic District is defined by its variety of buildings. Every residential block contains at least two or more of the above outlined styles. For instance, of the 27 buildings within the 200 and 300 blocks of North Front Street there are seven Queen Anne residence; nine Italianate residences; three Colonial Revival residences; one Second Empire residence; one Federal residence; two Greek Revival residences; and three Prairie residences. The degree of integrity as it relates to the extent of a building's remodeling adds another variance factor to the residential streetscape of the Island. The buildings along Maryland Street represent the typical variances of integrity found along each street within the district. Maryland Street has seven Queen Anne residences, five have been remodeled and two of these have been significantly altered.

There are 17 Italianate residences along Maryland Street, 13 have been remodeled and four of these have been significantly altered, and of the eight Colonial Revival residences, three have been remodeled and two of these have been significantly altered.

Although most streets exhibit this variety in architectural style and integrity, there are several areas or "pockets" of historic development. The largest and most obvious is the area once know as "Belle Isle Addition" which consists of those properties located north of Georgia Street along North Erie, North Wabash, North Huron, and North Front Streets. The homes in this area represent the most consistent intact collection of early twentieth century buildings on the Island.

The uniform building setback is minimal along North Wabash and North Huron Streets and the modest frame residences seem almost perched along the triangular shaped Belle Isle Park formed by the convergence of the two streets. Typical of the original Belle Isle Addition residences are the Colonial Revival buildings at 617 North Wabash Street and 620 North Huron Street, and the Bungalow buildings at 607 North Wabash Street and 612 North Huron Street.

Other pockets of development are extant, but they are much smaller and, therefore, less obvious. One such pocket is formed by the single family residences and duplexes along the 400 block of North Wabash Street. The buildings are 417 through 427, 433-435, 416-418, 420 and 422, 432-434, and 436-438 are modest Italianate and Queen Anne residences constructed between 1900 and 1910. The most prominent evidence of development are the various collections of identical duplexes such as those at 61-75 Virginia Street, 501-507 North Wabash Street, and 405-415 South Front Street.

There are 34 commercial buildings within the Wheeling Island Historic District and 22 of these are non-contributing buildings. There are four 19th century commercial buildings on the Island that were originally commercial. The two story Queen Anne buildings are 56 Virginia Street and 50 Kentucky Street, and the two story brick Italianate building at 50 Broadway Street have first story commercial storefronts with residential units on the second floors. The two story brick Romanesque building at 100 South Penn Street was constructed in c. 1895 as a drug store and is presently used as a meeting or banquet hall. The remaining 19th century commercial buildings were originally residences converted to commercial uses. Most typical of this is the one story frame building at 26 South Penn Street and the two story frame building at 78 New Jersey Street retaining a residential unit at the second story. There are two early twentieth century commercial buildings which contribute to the district. 329 North York Street and 10-12 South Broadway Street are two story brick buildings constructed c. 1925. The former was originally used as a dance hall and was recently remodeled for use as a restaurant, and the later is an auto body shop.

The largest contributing building in the district the Old Exposition Hall located on Stone Street at the site of Wheeling Downs, a complex of buildings servicing a popular dog racing track. The Exposition Hall is a large single story three level concrete building having shaped parapets and large arch window openings. The building was constructed in 1924 by the West Virginia Exposition and State Fair Association. The building was used as a rollerskating arena and is presently vacant. The other two contributing buildings at this site are the two modest concrete block offices with hipped roofs one of which has three-over-three sash windows.

The largest non-contributing building in the district is also part of Wheeling Downs. The large multi-story glass and block complex housing the grandstands, concessions, service, and management offices is situated along the race track. Other non-contributing buildings at Wheeling Downs include the four concrete block kennels and two concrete block stables located to the east of the track behind the grandstands. The more typical non-contributing commercial buildings within the district are mainly late 20th century additions such as the Kentucky Fried Chicken and the Wheeling National Bank Building on Zane Street and the Convenient Food Mart and the Regional Transit Authority Building on South Huron Street.

There are eight churches within the Wheeling Island Historic District of which four are contributing resources. The largest and most prominent church in the district is the Thomson United Methodist Church at Ohio and South Broadway Streets. This Victorian Gothic church was constructed between 1913 and 1915 of rusticated brownstone. It features a two story sanctuary under a truncated hipped roof with secondary gables marking the entrances and a square bell tower topped by corner spires rising a full story above the roof along the Ohio Street elevation. The modest brick Romanesque buildings housing The Way Memorial Temple at Maryland and North Broadway Streets and the Church of God at 24 South Broadway Street are more in keeping with the scale and detail of the Island's buildings. Those churches which are non-contributing buildings were constructed later than 1940 and include the Church of the Latter Day Saints in the 700 block of North Front Street, St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church at North York and Indiana Streets, Blessed Trinity Church at 110 North York Street, and the Island Christian Church at Zane and North Broadway Streets.

Other non-residential buildings on the Island include the Madison School, 1916, and the firehouse, 1930-1931. Both of these buildings are two stories, of brick construction, located on Zane Street, and are contributing to the district.

The Wheeling Island Historic District has five structures of which three are contributing. The structures include the Wheeling Suspension Bridge (National Register, 1970; National Historic Landmark, 1975; Historic American Building Survey, W.V. 2), the Bridgeport Bridge, the Aetnaville Bridge, the Fort Henry Bridge, and the Wheeling Island Stadium. The Wheeling Suspension Bridge, crossing the Ohio between Wheeling Island and downtown Wheeling was constructed between 1846 and 1849. It is a long-span bridge constructed on the French garland system incorporating wire cable supported on stone piers. The Bridgeport Bridge, recorded by the Historic American Engineering Record W.V. - 15, crossing the west channel of the Ohio between Wheeling Island and Bridgeport, Ohio, was constructed in 1893. It is a prefabricated iron truss bridge with sandstone piers. The Aetnaville Bridge also crosses the west channel and it was constructed in 1891. It is a steel truss bridge with seven spans supported by sandstone piers. The bridge was closed to motorized traffic in 1988. The Fort Henry Bridge crosses over the river and Island as part of Interstate 70. It was constructed in 1955 and is one of the non-contributing structures. The other non-contributing structure is the Wheeling Island Stadium located between South Front, Stone, and South Penn Streets.

There are five contributing sites on the Island. The largest is known as "The Marina" and is a grassy park stretching along the banks of the west channel between Indiana and Georgia Streets. Another site is known as "Bridge Park" at Zane and North Wabash Streets. These two sites were part of the Old Fair Grounds which was converted for use as a launching point for small boats by the Corps of Engineers in 1972. The Wheeling Island Baseball Park is on the 1901 Atlas and is located still along South Wabash Street. The northern tip of the Island was once known as Belle Isle Beach and is today a wood lot. "Belle Isle Park" was an original park of the Belle Isle Addition developed in the late 1920's. It is a triangular park located between Georgia, North Huron, and North Wabash Streets.

There are also four objects on the Island of which three are contributing to the historic district. One of these is the granite "Riverside Park - 1800 - erected by Henry Schmulbach" monument at the Island Marina Park which features basins for watering horses and a model of a capstan. It was moved here from its original site along the east channel of the Ohio in downtown Wheeling. Another monument is located at Belle Isle Park and takes the form of concrete and stone gate posts although neither a gate or fence exists. The non-contributing object is the planter and plaque at Bridge Park which post dates 1986.

The Wheeling Island Historic District contains an extensive collection of late 19th and early 20th century residential buildings. The buildings are typical and representative of the time period, but the characteristics of the Island provide an unusual and unique setting.

Section 8 Page 1

The Wheeling Island Historic District is an architecturally significant area of the City of Wheeling. The district contains one of the largest concentrations of typical mid-to-late 19th and early 20th century residential buildings. Residential development of the Island was spurred by the completion of the Wheeling Suspension Bridge in 1849, and was sustained through to the 1930's by an extensive streetcar system and the success of the City of Wheeling's commerce and industry.

The town of Wheeling attracted commerce, industry, and settlement because of its proximity to transportation. The Ohio River provided convenient access to trade and travel, and with the completion of the National Road to Wheeling in 1818 the town was transformed into a "Gateway to the West". Early 19th century cross-river transportation along the National Road near Wheeling was primitive. Two ferries operated the east channel of the Ohio River between Wheeling a sparsely populated Island known as "Zane's Island". The west channel between the Island and Ohio was simply forded. As traffic along the National Road increased it was apparent that bridges were necessary to accommodate and expedite river crossing.

In 1837, The Wheeling and Belmont Bridge Company constructed a wooden bridge across the west channel. Adversaries against bridge construction along the Ohio River blocked the construction of a bridge across the east channel at Wheeling claiming that it would interfere with the free flow of river traffic. Finally, however, in 1849, against great opposition, the Wheeling and Belmont Bridge Company proudly opened the Wheeling Suspension Bridge (National Historic Landmark, 1975) connecting Wheeling's central business district to the Island and providing the final link in cross-river transportation between West Virginia and Ohio. The Wheeling Suspension Bridge was designed by Charles Ellet, Jr. of Philadelphia and was the longest suspension bridge in the world. Between the time the bridge was opened to traffic in 1849 and 1872, the bridge would be rehabilitated four times.

No event in the history of Wheeling Island had a greater impact on the Island than the opening of the Wheeling Suspension Bridge. Prior to the construction of the suspension bridge, the Island was owned by the Zane family who operated the ferry service and farmed the land. Settlement was minimal, and early attempts at residential development were unsuccessful because the Island was virtually inaccessible. However, on the day the bridge was opened, it is reported that Noah Zane sold fifty residential building lots on the Island, and within the year the Island was annexed as the seventh ward of the City of Wheeling.

The Island attracted both wealthy and working class residents. The former were attracted to the Island because it was "away from the noise and contaminated atmosphere of the city." These residents were attracted to the scenic shores of the Ohio along Front Street.

The Federal Style Taney-Pollock House at North Front and Zane Streets and the nationally significant Greek Revival C.B. Brues House (Historic American Buildings Survey, WV. 183) at 204 North Front Street appear on an 1853 atlas and are surviving examples of the earliest period of residential development. On the other hand, the working class residents were attracted to Wheeling Island because it was convenient to the city's central business district and to employment opportunities at the manufacturing facilities along the river. These residents purchased affordable lots and constructed homes like the brick row houses at 109 and 111 South Front Street. By 1859, there were approximately 124 residents of Wheeling Island.

Wheeling Island appeared to be an ideal place to live until 1865 when the river's water level rose above 50 feet and completely covered the Island. The flood devastated the Island and its buildings, but residents coped and settlement continued. Existing residents raised their homes onto higher foundations, as evidenced by the c. 1865 frame residence at 207 South Penn Street. Its original brick foundation now rests on a newer stone foundation elevating the entire house. New homes were constructed on higher foundations as evidenced by the majority of the homes on the Island. The 1865 flood was paralleled by floods in 1884, 1901, 1913, 1936, and 1942. Floods became a part of life on Wheeling Island with 33 floods occurring within a period of 100 years.

By the late 1880's, the Citizen's Railway Company had completed an elaborate streetcar system in Wheeling. The construction in 1892 of the "Steel Bridge" (no longer extant) connecting from downtown between 10th and 11th Streets off Main Street to Ohio Street on the Island allowed streetcar access to the Island. The streetcar initiated residential development of the Island, and also provided exodus from the flood-plagued Island for those who could afford to move to other parts of Wheeling and outlying neighborhoods such as Woodsdale. Wheeling Traction streetcars crossed the new bridge and then ran south on South Front Street to the fair grounds turning north on Penn Street turning west on Zane then north on York Street to the Aetnaville Bridge and back south on Huron Street to Zane Street to Penn to Ohio and back across the bridge to downtown. The Wheeling-Elm Grove Line crossed the "steel bridge" and ran east/west on Ohio Street to Huron to Zane and across the "back channel bridge" to Bridgeport, Ohio. Some wealthy businessmen recognized the benefits and convenience of streetcar travel and constructed residential units accordingly. Typical of such development are the duplexes at 405-407, 409-411, and 415-417 South Front Street. Constructed c. 1890, these buildings were owned by F. Schwertfeger, co-owner of the George Stifel & Company, the largest department store in Wheeling. Between speculative residential development and the streetcar, the Island's population soared to 7,000 by 1890.

The homes constructed on the Island between 1880 and 1900 ranged in scale and detail. The largest and most elaborate houses were soon constructed along Front Street such as the Second Empire residence at 310 South Front Street and the ornate Queen Anne residence at 209 South Front Street. Most typical of the era, however, are the many moderate homes such as those at 403, 405, and 406 South Penn Street.

In 1893, the Wheeling and Belmont Bridge Company completed a new bridge to Bridgeport, Ohio, to accommodate vehicular traffic and electric streetcar tracks. The construction of the new bridge was supervised by Wilhelm Hildenbrand who assisted John Roebling with the engineering work on the Brooklyn Bridge, New York. The prefabricated truss bridge was placed on to the piers of the old wooden bridge. The bridge was named the Bridgeport Bridge, but was also referred to as the "Back Channel Bridge."

Wheeling Island developed as a typical community with its own school, churches, and firehouse. The Island's school was designed by F. F. Faris and constructed on Zane Street in 1916. The Madison School was enlarged in 1970 with the addition of an auditorium. The largest most prominent Island church is the Thomson United Methodist Church at Ohio and South Broadway Street. The building was constructed between 1913 and 1915. St Lukes Episcopal Church at the corner of South Penn and Ohio has had a rich history on the Island beginning in 1883. The building was badly damaged by floods in 1884 and 1907 and destroyed by fire in 1986. The stone walls were reused as the base for the current sanctuary which was completed in 1989. Other historic Island churches include the Way Memorial Temple and the Church of God, constructed 1916 and 1871, respectively. The brick Number 7 Firehouse was constructed by the city on Zane Street in 1930.

By the turn-of-the century, most of the streets on the Island had their own streetcar. Residential development of the Island continued through the 1930's with the development of Henry Schmulbach's horse track and breeding stables at the north end of the Island. This land was purchased by Hesse & Kirchner Real Estate Company who laid out building lots and named the subdivision "Belle Isle Addition". The subdivision was centered around a triangular shaped park and consisted of some 200 building lots. The homes constructed in Belle Isle were modest frame bungalows and those along the park appear perched on their lots because of their substantial foundations. The homes in the 600 blocks of North Wabash and North Huron Streets are the heart of what was Belle Isle.

At the height of the Depression, while the country was focused on unemployment and breadlines, the residents of Wheeling Island were given a diversion in the form of a half mile race track at the Old West Virginia Exposition and State Fair grounds. The Island had long been the site of carnivals and fairs held in the areas known as "Bridge Park" and the "Marina". In 1881, the West Virginia Exposition and State Fair opened on the 25 acres of ground forming the southern tip of the Island. The state fair operated the fairgrounds and Exposition Building until 1937 when the racetrack was constructed and the land was given the name "Wheeling Downs". The Old Exposition Building, constructed in 1924, still stands on the grounds of Wheeling Downs, which today is a popular dog racing track.

Wheeling Island was considered a "Garden Spot" until the early 1940's when the Island began to decline in population. This extensive collection of typical mid-to-late 19th and early 20th century residential buildings and its unique site nestled in the Ohio River is unparalleled in West Virginia.

Amended Items in Nomination:

A file check of the 1990 Wheeling Island Survey against the Wheeling Island National Register nomination found that two streets - Kentucky and Erie Streets, plus several miscellaneous sites, had been left out of Section 7's description of buildings. The original map with the nomination was correct, and the count of the buildings was accurate.

Attached is the Supplemental Listing, pages 241-250, of architectural descriptions.

23 Kentucky Street, residential

date: c. 1905

description: This is a 2 1/2 story frame house with a hipped roof rising from an entablature decorated with modillions. A small gable on the East covers an angled bay window. The North side shows a hipped dormer and a rectangular block of bay windows capped with a full octagonal tower with a pyramidal roof. The full width front porch again has a modillion decorated cornice and a small closed gabled portico with a sunburst motif.

1 Contributing building

25 Kentucky Street, residential

date: c. 1890

description: This is a 2 1/2 story L-shaped block, frame house with a 1 1/2 story rear appendage. The gable roof has three sections: the central section's ridge is parallel to the street and intersected by a front facing gable which covers the forward projecting leg, and a distinct rear facing gable over the lower rear section of the house. A 2 story angled bay window curbs the front leg of a cutaway porch.

1 Contributing building

26 Kentucky Street, residential

date: c. 1870

description: This is a 2 story narrow, deep, frame house. The intersecting gable roof with returns has ridges parallel in the front and perpendicular in the rear. There is a full width porch with fluted square columns.
